

The Human Heritage Contract

Preamble

I, a conscious and autonomous individual of the human species, by my own free will, choose to sign this contract. I do so not in service of a group, ideology, or nation, but in alignment with a shared recognition of what it means to preserve, protect, and improve the conditions for conscious life on Earth and beyond. This contract is not a statement of superiority or moral perfection, but an expression of clarity and commitment to the survival and flourishing of humankind through voluntary cooperation.

I enter this contract publicly, understanding that it may not be modified, amended, or revoked in any form by others. Its preservation is essential to ensure consistency across time and allow others to freely build upon it without distortion or contradiction.

By signing, I also acknowledge that this is a foundational effort to create a core contractual concept, upon which individuals may freely organize themselves into societies that reflect their shared values--without contradicting the principles of this contract.

Axioms

1. Human beings are almost always inherently well-intentioned, but good intentions alone do not guarantee good outcomes.
2. Evil is most often caused, not by malice, but by misguided or unexamined intentions.
3. Empathy, when not aligned with objective truth, can be used to cause great harm. Truth and compassion must be united for actions to be truly good.
4. Individualism is sacred. The freedom to think, feel, and live as an autonomous being is a necessary condition for moral progress.
5. No society or group, however well-meaning, should suppress the individual's right to question, to dissent, or to live peacefully according to their conscience.
6. Human survival must never be pursued at the cost of suppressing peaceful members of our own kind.
7. Collective progress is only possible through the voluntary cooperation of individuals, each contributing freely, with their own understanding, strengths, and imperfections.

The Human Heritage Contract

Commitments of the Signer

By signing this contract, I make the following personal commitments:

1. I will strive to align my empathy with truth, and my truth with empathy.
2. I will remain vigilant against the use of good intentions to justify harm.
3. I will not blindly follow ideologies, authorities, or popular opinion without reasoned reflection.
4. I will defend the right of peaceful individuals to think and live freely.
5. I will not seek to impose my views by coercion or manipulation.
6. I will try to encourage cooperation with others who have signed this contract, even if we differ in customs, beliefs, or supplemental agreements.
7. I understand that signing this contract does not make me better--it makes me responsible.

Preservation Clause

This contract is immutable. No one--individual, collective, or system--may alter its text. Those who wish to create supplemental contracts, philosophies, or operational models are encouraged to do so, provided they do not contradict any part of this original Human Heritage Contract.

Free Association Clause

All signers retain the right to associate, organize, and govern themselves according to their values, so long as they do not violate the core axioms of this contract. Diversity of thought and custom is a strength when rooted in shared ethical ground.

Withdrawal Clause

Any signer may withdraw from this contract at any time, for any reason, without consequence or judgment. This withdrawal will be recorded transparently and permanently alongside the original signature record, as a matter of historical truth.
